GREETINGS TO MY FELLOW CENTRALITES, SPOUSES, FRIENDS AND GUESTS!

Last week we learned more about Chinese culture, traditions, beliefs and practices. We had a glimpse of how Chinese people attract more prosperity and success. The resource speaker Edna Chua Ko made me realize that in every culture I believe, has certain practices toward prosperity and success. Otherwise, whatever beliefs and practices we may have, it is always guided by the basic principle of life “YOU REAP WHAT YOU SOW”.

This month is another busy month for me as I revisit all our accomplishments and plan for the things to be done to complete the scorecard. Related to this, please spend time to participate for the forthcoming Rotary Week this coming February 16-23. This is a great opportunity for fellowship with other clubs, learn more about Rotary and to benchmark with other club's best practices in all areas and in all aspects.

On the other hand, make yourself available on February 13, Thursday 6:30PM. Our ROTARACTORS will have their annual concert at the UIC Auditorium Santo Niño Building Bajada Campus. Part of the program is the giving of certificate of recognition to our club as UIC service partners. Be there to support our ROTARACTORS.

Our relentless commitment to Rotary has been a touchstone of genuine service that gives inspiration to many specially to the new generation. Our intensified efforts and cooperation had brought us in to this far. However, in this fast-changing world, there is always more to look forward to. The need to expand our adaptability skills is essential as our club welcomes new ideas.

Inspired by your unceasing dedication to serve our dear Rotary, I am confident that we could give more and more as we connect to the world. Let us sow more seeds of trust and confidence with each other and together let us reap more prosperity and success in due time.

Police Officer takes the Lessons of the Rotary Peace Program to the streets of Philadelphia

The tension is palpable as we cruise through a neighborhood of dilapidated row houses in one of the toughest parts of Philadelphia. Buildings jaggedly rise from the street – like a mouth full of busted teeth.

Lt. D.F. Pace nods to acknowledge a stare. He understands.

In his 15-year career with the Philadelphia Police Department, Pace has taken pride in being naturally tolerant and level-headed, qualities that helped him rise through the ranks. But he is human. To maintain a level head under pressure, at times he uses several techniques he learned through the Rotary Peace Fellowship program.

In 2010, Pace applied for the intensive three-month professional certificate program in Thailand. The idea had come to then-Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey through a suggestion from the Philadelphia Rotary Club, the 19th-oldest Rotary club in the world. Pace relished the challenge. “As soon as I saw it, I said, ‘This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.’”

Pace saw the fellowship as a way to defuse a developing powder keg. “Even before events like what happened in Ferguson [Mo.], I saw an unease developing between police and the community,” he recalls. “I thought, ‘If we don’t get a handle on this, the lid’s going to come off.’” The growing tension between police and residents also troubled members of the Philadelphia Rotary Club. They considered a few ideas until Joseph Batory, then scholarship chair of the club, had a light-bulb moment: the peace fellowship.

“Sometimes the obvious is right in front of us,” says Batory. “It finally dawned on me that a police officer is at the very forefront of violence prevention and peacebuilding and, as such, would be a great fit for Rotary’s three-month certification program.”

In D.F. Pace, known as “D” to friends, Batory believed the club had found the perfect candidate: “He was an up-and-coming young lieutenant with patrol experience on the streets, but he’s also a lawyer and thus well-versed in the legal aspects of proper policing,” he says. “He reflected Commissioner Ramsey’s vision of creating a new generation of police officers with enhanced professionalism, dramatically improved judgment, and dedication to being instruments of peace.”

Friction, racial and otherwise, between police and the people they protect is not new. But the killings of unarmed black men by police in recent years, captured on camera phones and broadcast on the nightly news, have indeed touched a match to the kindling that Pace and others saw piling higher and higher.

Police Officer takes the Lessons of the Rotary Peace Program to the streets of Philadelphia

Lt. D.F. Pace speaks to the Rotary Club of Philadelphia. Members encouraged then-Commissioner Charles Ramsey to solicit applications for the peace fellowship.

Philadelphia has not had the kind of headline-grabbing police-involved shootings that St. Louis, Chicago, and New York have had. However, it ranks in the top 20 in murder and crime rates among big cities in the United States. Almost from day one, Ramsey (who retired in January 2016) looked for innovative ways to avoid the former and reduce the latter.

“Ramsey’s a forward thinker,” says Pace. “He was always looking for ways to infuse new ideas into his police department.” Even so, when Philadelphia Rotary Club members pitched the peace fellowship to Ramsey, they kept their expectations low. But when Batory met with the commissioner, Ramsey took out a notepad and listened intently. He liked the idea and put out a citywide memorandum inviting officers to apply.

Each year, Rotary selects up to 100 individuals from around the world to receive fully funded academic fellowships at a peace center. These fellowships cover tuition and fees, room and board, round-trip transportation, and all internship and field-study expenses.

In just over a decade, the Rotary Peace Centers have trained more than 1,000 fellows for careers in peacebuilding. Many of them go on to serve as leaders in national governments, nongovernmental organizations, the military, and international organizations like the United Nations and World Bank.

Pace says his cohort included a labor relations specialist, a women’s rights advocate, educators, and lawyers.

Kaspersky warns of 'nCOV' Computer Virus, Harmful Files

MANILA, Philippines — As the 2019 novel (new) coronavirus or 2019-nCoV continues to spread globally, a possible computer virus is also hitting the world wide web.

Cybersecurity and anti-virus provider Kaspersky said it has detected "malicious files disguised as documents related to the newly discovered coronavirus."

Malicious files, masking as useful information on the 2019 nCoV, include formats in pdf (document), MP4 (video) and docx (document).

"The names of files imply that they contain video instructions on how to protect yourself from the virus, updates on the threat and even virus detection procedures, which is not actually the case," the digital security company said in a release.

The discovered files were said to contain a range of threats from Trojans to worms that can destroy, block, modify or copy data. They are also capable of interfering with computer or computer network operations.

"The coronavirus, which is being widely discussed as a major news story, has already been used as bait by cybercriminals," Kaspersky malware analyst Anton Ivanov said in the release.

"So far we have seen only 10 unique files, but as this sort of activity often happens with popular media topics then we expect that this tendency may grow. As people continue to be worried for their health, we may see more and more malware hidden inside fake documents about the coronavirus being spread."

The coronavirus-related files were listed with the following detection names:

Worm.VBS.Dinihou.r
Worm.Python.Agent.c
UDS: DangerousObject.Multi.Generic
Trojan.WinLNK.Agent.gg
Trojan.WinLNK.Agent.ew
HEUR:Trojan.WinLNK.Agent.gen
HEUR:Trojan.PDF.Badur.b

Kaspersky recommends following only official sources for legitimate and verified information, avoiding suspicious links that promise exclusive content.

It also advised internet users to double-check the file extensions, warning against downloading files with .exe or .lnk formats posing as document or video files.
